

About Mr. Wright.

"Mr. Wright didn't fly yesterday because his rudder was out of order."

"Mr. Wright said there was too much wind for him to fly yesterday."

"Mr. Wright's motor gave out just as he was on the point of flying."

"It is now stated that Mr. Wright's propeller is not in working order."

"Mr. Wright has again broken a record."

"Mr. Wright thinks he ascended about 600 feet."

"Mr. Wright was congratulated yesterday by Governor Hughes."

"Mr. Wright is not a man who says much. Neither does he fly much."

"Mr. Wright's cylinder head blew out just as he was thinking of making a flight."

"Mr. Wright took breakfast the other morning at 8 o'clock."

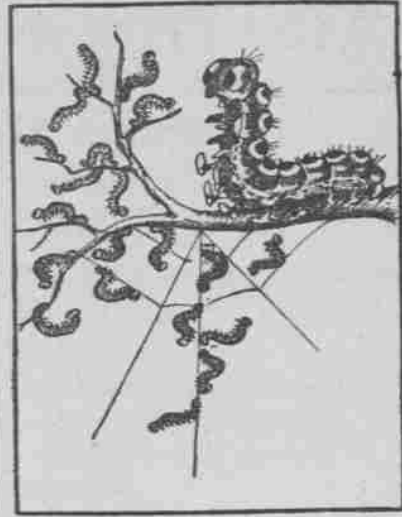

"Mr. Wright will cross the Atlantic next spring—in a steamer."

"Mr. Wright has scooped up and scooped down, and what of it?"

"Mr. Wright is teaching Army officers to fly. He has had some of them up in the air all of two minutes at a time."

"Mr. Wright has solved the problem of aerial navigation. All you've got to do is to get an aeroplane, tank up and start for China. If you don't reach further than Smith's cornfield you can lay it to politics, the propeller, the motor, the rudder or to the red-headed woman who waved you good-by. Stock selling rapidly, and will soon be as high as Texas oil or Arizona diamonds."

A DARK OUTLOOK.

Here's winter right at hand and every one of these children must have new shoes.

TOO CAUTIOUS FOR THE GAME.

"Let's get into the scrimmage—she isn't looking our way."

"No, we'll stay right here. Even if we get out of that bunch alive there wouldn't be enough of us left for her to recognize."

A Proud Moment.

I KNOWN my son Ben was in the college football "leven," said the old farmer as we drove along the highway in his wagon, but I never asked him anything about it or was at all interested until I went up to New Haven one day to take him some money. There was a practice game on, and Ben said I must see it. As I had to wait for my train I went out to the grounds, along with a heap of others. I wasn't a mite interested in the proceedings, though other folks yelled themselves hoarse. I couldn't help but think all the time that if Ben had worked half as hard splitting rails or hoeing corn on the farm I could have afforded to pay him $15 a month and board. I was waiting for him when the game was over when along comes a college man and says:

"Are you Mr. Jones?"

"I are."

"Father of Ben Jones?"

"The same."

"Then come with me."

"I went with him to where there was a little crowd assembled and there I beheld Ben a-lyin' on the grass. His nose was busted, teeth knocked out, eyes blacked and his shoulder out of joint, and he was so white and still that I was afraid he was dead. I went over to him and said: 'Who's a-killin' of my only son, and where is the murderer?' Then a man steps up and lays a hand on my shoulder and says: 'Your only son is jest a-reatin', and nobody has murdered him. Gaze on him, old man, and remember this as the proudest minute of your life. He heads the center rush, and the discovery of the North Pole ain't a patch on it!'"

Horse Tries to Rob Mails.

A near-sighted dapple-gray horse named Dan today mistook a rural free delivery letter box for a box of oats and tried to eat it up. The horse, which formerly belonged to the Paterson fire department, was being driven by its present owner, Herman Hackstahl, a farmer, who was on his way to a saloon to buy a young pig. Hackstahl, when it came to rain, reined up beneath a giant elm tree in front of El Snoderass' home. At home the horse is usually fed oats out of a gray box something the color of a letter box. Having left the oats box at the house, Hackstahl went into Snoderass' to borrow a meal for Dan. The horse, meantime, saw the letter box and stepped up and took a bite. The animal's teeth broke off the top of the mail receptacle and exposed to view and rain the assortment of letters.

One bite satisfied the horse, which let go of the box and backed off. Hackstahl and Snoderass picked up the crushed top and stuck it on, then telephoned for the carrier, who was enjoying a Sunday afternoon rest. The carrier is talking of arresting the old horse on the charge of attempting to rob the mails.

When Dan was a fire horse he several times was caught pulling out of a trap that permitted oats to run down a chute in the fire house, and in this way he had obtained several good meals. Dan got loose in his stall by means he always sought out if he fed chum and was an adept at pulling out the slide, which brought down the desired food. It was suggested to Hackstahl that maybe the horse might take the letter box for an oats chute, but he said the letter box was a duplicate of the pasteboard box used for feeding the animal.—New York Press.
